Jewish growth plan for east Jerusalem BILL HUTMAN

A GROUP of Jerusalem activists have already devised a plan to greatly expand Jewish development in Arab sectors of the city under a new government led by Binyamin Netanyahu, The Jerusalem Post has learned. The 15-point plan by the Jerusalem Forum includes huilding Jewish housing projects in the Ras Al-Amud neighborhood, in the City of David section of Silwan; and on the Mount of Olives next to the Beit Orot Yeshiva, in the A-Tur neighborhood. Jerusalem Deputy Mayor Shmuel Meir (National Religious Party), who heads the Jerusalem Forum, came up with the plan together with Matti Dan of Ateret Cohanim, and David Be'eri of Elad - groups that promote Jewish settlement in Arab neighborhoods - and other forum members.

The plan also touches on other areas in addition to Jewish development - calling for the immediate closure of Orient House and 50 other Palestinian offices allegedly connected with the Palestinian Authority in the city, and the eviction of Palestinian security agents from Jerusalem.

"We have been preparing groundwork for years for the time when a government that truly supports Jerusalem as the eternal capital of the Jewish people would come to power," Meir told the Post on Friday

Meir said the plan, which includes a call for Israeli sovereignty to be expanded to include Ma'aleh Adumim, Givat Ze'ev and Betar, would be presented to Netanyahu early this week.

"We already own much land and many homes in east Jerusalem, hut have waited until now to take of candidates, although some in them over because of the former government's opposition," Meir said.

Yatom hopes to revitalize a troubled Mossad BACKGROUND ARIEH O'SULLIVAN and STEVE RODAN

DANNY Yatom, the first serving Mossad head whose name can be published, takes over the intelligence organization today, stepping into an institution whose stellar reputation has been damaged hy internal strife and whose role has been marginalized in the era of peace.

Yatom, a decorated majorgeneral, replaces Shabtai Shavit, who headed the Mossad since 1989 and leaves to direct Kupat Holim Maccahi. Yatom brings with him a mix of talents rare among military men. He has rich field experience as a commando. an armored corps commander, and OC Central Command. A mathematician with degrees in physics and computer science, Yatom has also occupied key non-combat roles, including head of the IDF Planning Branch and the IDF research and development program.

But Yatom was chosen to head the organization responsible for overseas intelligence gathering and covert operations primarily because of his success as military aide to the prime minister and minister of defense, first under Yitzhak Rabin and then under Shimon Peres. In this role, he was in contact with all the intelligence agencies and coordinated their contacts with the prime minister. On Friday, Yatom ended his 33year military career and was re-placed by Maj.-Gen. Ze'ev Livne. In a letter, Peres praised Yatom's "efficient and clean" security reviews and his "correct advice."

Some of the major tasks facing Yatom will be the fight against Islamic terrorism, mainly focused on the foreign funding and guidance given to Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

Yatom is the first outsider appointed to head the Mossad since Maj.-Gen. (res.) Yitzhak Hofi left 14 years ago. "This is a positive message to

The truce in Chechnya's 17-month insurgency was to begin despite an outbreak of fighting hours earlier that helped delay new peace negotiations.

Meanwhile, a new poll published yesterday gives Boris Yeltsin a lead of more than 12, percentage points over Communist leader Gennady Zyuganov, his best poll showing to date in the hard-fought race for president. The Moscow Times-CNN poll shows the incumbent gaining steadily while Zyuganov stagnates in the countdown to the June 16 election.

The newspaper said 32.6 percent of the respondents said they were going to vote for Yeltsin on June 16 and 19.7 percent said they were voting for Zyuganov. Nearly 18 percent said they were undecided.

The poll of 1.055 people was done by the Institute for Comparative Social Research, or CESSI, between May 21 an May 27 and had a margin of error of 3 percentage points. The Chechnya cease-fire reached by Presi-dent Boris Yeltsin and the rebel leader Zelimkhan Yandarbiyev was to take effect at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

Fighting broke out after Russian troops claimed rebel fighters had entered Shali, 24 km southeast of the Chechen capital, Russian Television said. A Russian soldier and a rebel commander were killed.

Russian commander Maj. Gen. Vladimir Shamanov threatened to attack Shali yesterday unless all rebel fighters in the town lay down their arms.

Any operation yesterday would violate the cease-fire.

Yesterday's negotiations were expected to focus on a plan for the withdrawal of federal troops and rebel disarmament. But Chechen negotiators said they were unable to attend talks the next day in the neighboring republic of Dagestan, Russian news agencies reported. The rebels cited "technical difficulties" and fears for their safety, but the fighting in Shali was one reason for the delay, the report said. Yeltsin said negotiations were key to resolving the conflict, but that full independence for the rebel republic remained out of the question. The president, in a tough race for re-election, is determined to show voters he is bringing the unpopular war to an end.

It is unclear whether either side will stick to the cease-fire. Russian troops have ignored past declarations from Yeltsin that the fighting must stop, and Russian officials have warned that not all rebel field commanders may be willing to hold their fire.

Saudis behead car bombers

RIYADH (AP) - Four Mostem militants who bombed a US-run military training facility, killing five Americans and two Indians, were beheaded in a public square in Riyadh Friday, the Interior Ministry said.

The men, all Sandi Arabians, were executed in accordance with the country's Islamic laws, despite threats by underground extremists to attack US interests in the kingdom if the four were punished. In Washington, US State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said there were no doubts about the men's guilt.

"I would just note that international law does permit judicially imposed capital punishment within an established procedural framework - and I think the results speak for themselves," Burns said.

About 60 people - more than half of them Americans - were also wounded in the Nov. 13 car bombing of a US-run training center in Riyadh for the National Guard

The bomhing, the first of its kind in the kingdom, came amid agitation among anti-Western Islamic fundamentalists for stricter observance of Sharia law.

Mandela concedes defeat in regional poll

CAPE TOWN (AP) - President Nelson Mandela coaceded his party's defeat yesterday by the nation's former apartheid rulers in crucial regional elections in the Western Cape province.

With most results counted from Wednesday's vote. Mandela said his African National Congress narrowed the lead held in the province by former President F. W. De Klerk's National Party in the first all-race elections in 1994.

"The ANC has made gains within all sections of the population." in Cape Town and its surroundings, the only province governed by the former apartheid party, Mandela said.

He said as the polling tally, neared completion yesterday, results showed ANC support in rural areas of the province rose from about nine percent in 1994 to 32 percent, and included a swing of mixed race voters, traditionally National Party supporters.

The ANC also won the majority of votes in Cape Town's economically powerful and densely populated Central district, he said.

A dispute over the vote count, meanwhile, was delaying final totals, probably until tomorrow, that would formally give the National Party control of regional local councils.

Election officials announced that De Klerk's party won the majority of seats in five of six district councils in metropolitan Cape; Town and 23 of 27 rural councils. But ANC officials said they suspected voting irregularities in their strongholds in black townships and squatter camps around Cape Town.

Party leaders were to seek a Supreme Court order to force a recount in the Tygerberg district, where electoral officers admitted a counting error was rectified to give the ANC one more council seat.

They further demanded investigations into why in Tygerberg polling and counting were delayed. voting lists were incomplete and ballot papers were in short supply. There was "an orchestrated attempt to prevent an ANC victory. in Tygerberg," the party's pro-vincial leader. Chris Nissen, charged.

Any recount was not expected to overturn the National Party's overall majority in the province.

"The people have finally wokeo up and realized you can be free and prosperous under the National Party," said a triumphant Peter Marais, the party's Provincial Minister of Local Government . The poll did not affect the Western Cape provincial parliament, where the National Party also won control in 1994.

Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams talks to reporters yesterday after counting was completed in the election for the Northern Ireland Peace Forum. Sinn Fein won an unexpectedly high 17 seats in the new 110-seat forum.

Sinn Fein warns of Ulster talks farce

BELFAST (Reuter) - Northern Irish naoonalist leader Gerry Adams said yesterday Britain's demands for an IRA ceasefire as the price of admission to Northern Ireland peace talks risked turning the exercise into a tragedy.

"There is a danger of them (the British government) turning all of this into a farce," the Sion Fein party president said. "And as many of us know, there is a very thin line (before) farce becomes tragedy."

Adams challenged the British government to drop its demand that the Irish Republican Army (TRA) renew a broken truce to allow Sinn Fein, their political arm, to join other parties at peace talks starting in Belfast on June 10.

The British view was spelled out on Friday hours after Sinn Fein won 15.5 percent of votes, its best-ever showing, in votes for e Forum to meet alongside negotiations to end 25 years of conflict between rival militias fighting for and against the continuation of British rule in the province.

It was repeated yesterday by Britain's Northern Ireland Secretary, Sir Patrick Mayhew, who said the IRA would have to end their campaign of violeoce to earn Sinn Feine seat at the peace talks.

People cannot., be expected to sit down and negotiate the future of their democracy with people who are inextricably linked with people who have used the weapons in the past for identical political motives and refuse to even contemplate giving them up in the course of those negotiations." he said.

Adams urged the Irish Republic government, Britain's partner in a two-year push to end the Northern Ireland conflict, to break with Britain in its insistence on an IRA truce. He said the Irish Republict, whose constituoon includes a claim to Northern Ireland, had a "constitutional imperetive" to defend the rights of Irish Nationalists io Northern Ireland, which was partitioned by Britain seven decades ago.

He said Irish Prime Minister John Brutoo could not claim to be champion of Irish rights in Northern Ireland when he was "colluding with the British government to deny the rights of those whoe voted for us,"

Bruton issued a fresh appeal for a oew IRA ceasefire hours after Sinn Fein came in fourth in the Forum poll by raising its share of the oational vote from 12 to 15.5 percent. Britain, Ireland and the US government have refused to talk to Sino Fein at ministerial level until the IRA ends the war oo Britain resumed with a wave of London bombs in February after a 17-mooth ceasefire .- .

Adams' remarks appeared to be an appeal for ministerial talks with the Irish government to explain how the June 10 talks will surmount the key hurdle of disarming rival militias.

Sinn Fein chairman Mitchel McLaughlin earlier appealed to the two governments to end the han. "Let's start talking to each other to achieve the desired objective of an IRA cessation (ceasefire), " he told Sky News. The IRA called a ceasefire on August 31, 1994, and was joined two months later by its rivals. Protestant Loyalist militias who fought to maintain British sovereignty.

The IRA returned to violence io February with a wave of attacks in Britain but has not targetted Northern Ireland itself for fear that Loyalists would take revenge hy killing members of the Catholic community from which the IRA draws support.

The British and Irish governments meet again on Tuesday to try to work out an agenda that includes the disarming of Northern Ireland militias in a way that does oot block progress oo e settlement between pro and anti-British parties.

The province's higgest political groups, Protestant Unionists who want the province to stay British, insist that arms must be handed over before there can be real negotiatioo on shaping a new "agreed Ireland" where all can live in peace.

AFTER months of smooth sailing, President Bill Clinton's re-election bid has hit choppy waters. The conviction of three former associates in Arkansas on fraud charges linked to the Whitewater affair was perhaps the biggest jolt. sending shivers up the spines of White House sides and putting smiles on the faces of Republicans. But there was also embarrassment in Clinton's legal attempt to delay a sexual harrassment suit and the shock election loss of key ally Shimon Peres in the Israeli election, possibly dealing a blow to the edministration's Middle East diplomacy.

The one mejor poll taken since the Whitewater convictions showed Clinton still leading Republican challenger Bob Dole by 16 perceptage points, down from 20 points May 12.

But 60 percent of respondents in the USA Today/CNN poll be-lieved Clinton was hiding something about his role in the Whitewater affair, a tangled financial controversy in Arkansas that only began with a failed investment in a land deal. Analysts said the bank fraud convictions of two former Clinton partners in the land deal would not alone seriously hurt him politically. But he has to negotiate a minefield in coming weeks starting on June 17 when New York Republi-

Last week in e brief to the Supreme Court, Clinton's lawyers cited a 1940 law that provides for delays in lawsuits involving military personnel as an example of relief provided federal employees. They suggested Clinton might war-rant similar treatment because of his role as commander-in-chief. Republicans pounced on the issue, which simultaneously reminded voters Clinton ducked military service in the Vietnam War era and has been subject to allegations of philandering.

If that were not enough for one week, Peres' defeat in Israel came despite all Chinton's efforts to boost him.

Meeting organizer James Hyslop says it allows these leading citizens to escape the glare of TV lights, let their hair down and bounce ideas off their peers.

"These people don't normally gather in e group and have discussions ... and speak freely and openly without having something ettributed to them," Hyslop said. "It eliminates the fear of being misquoted."

The furtive nature of these annual events offers fertile ground for conspiracy theories, many of which are aired on the Internet.

"The role of the Bilderberg group is a one-world totalitarian, government and economic system," one writer says in an essay posted to the Internet site, Conspiracy Nation.

The essay goes on to explain purported initiation rites such as spitting on a Christian cross - and how Bilderbergers ordered the assassination of former US president John Kennedy because he found out about a plot involving drugs and space aliens.

Asked how it felt to be touted as the ringleader for an international conspiracy, Hyslop said: "God, I wish it was that glamorous."

Hits, not misses for medical researchers

JUDY SIEGEL-ITZKOVICH

VONDUCTING basic medical research is rather like shooting an arrow blindfolded and hoping it will hit the bull's-eye. A scientist can spend years in the lab on "misses" that don't pan out into anything practical for the patient.

But some researchers are more fortunate. Their work not only paves new paths of understanding, but also leads to tangible results that can improve diagnosis and treatment.

The Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School recently presented a number of such "hits" in a meeting with health reporters, who were bombarded with information on a level to which medical students are accustomed.

Prof. Raymond Kaempfer headed a research team that discovered a technique for predicting which kidney-cancer patients would respond well to treatment and which would not.

Kidney cancer, said the molecular biologist, is the fifth most common type of tumor, after breast, lung, prostate and colon cancer. It almost always appears after the age of 50, striking hundreds of Israelis and some 50,000 Americans each year.

After undergoing surgery to remove the cancer, the patient is given infusions of a special type of bacteria, BCG (bacilla Calmette-Guérin), to stimulate his immune system to fight against a recurrence of the cancer. This treatment causes 60 percent of the patients to go into remission, but the rest suffer a relapse. Until now, there has been no way to predict which patients will respond well to the BCG treatment.

Kaempfer and his fellow molecular biologist have been investigating for several years two genes whose function is vital to the body's immine reactions: one is responsible for the production of interleukin-2 and the other for interferon-gamma. These natural substances, produced by the blood cells, are vital in determining bow

The team found a way to measure the genes' activities based on small blood samples.

Following 73 kidney-cancer patients over a period of four years, they found that the gene that produces interferon-gamma functions normally in them, but the gene for interleukin-2 production was very variable among the patients.

By testing the gene during BCG treatment, Kaempfer was able to predict with 97% accuracy who would go into remission and who would have to face a repeated bout with the cancer. In medical terms, he said, this figure is considered virtually foolproof.

"We discovered that the activity of the gene for interleukin-2 is critical for the anti-cancer reaction in kidney-cancer patients, and we are now able to predict with great accuracy which patients will overcome their cancer," said Kaempfer, who was joined in clinical studies by Dr. Amos Shapira of Hadassah-University Hospital's urology department. This is considered an achievement of world importance, and an article on it will soon appear in an American oncological journal

Although learning that they will tot go into remission with BCG is bad news for patients, oncologists will be able to customize the BCG therapy for them or try other treatments at an early stage to try to increase their chances for survival. Tens of thousands of lives around the world will be saved as a result of this new predictive tool. Kaempfer said be hopes the work will have implications on other types of cancer as well. Another important first at the medical school was the development of a new technique to grow blood cells in culture; this allows testing of various substances on the production of fetal hemoglobin, Prof. Eitan Fibach, who headed the research team for this project, said it will speed medicine's ability to find treatment for anemia of genetic origin, such as sickle cell anemia and thalassemia. frequent transfusions.

Professor Raymond Kaempfer (center) and his research team at the Hebrew University-Medical School, who discovered a technique to help kidney-cancer patients. (Tav Or)

Epidemiologists have known for some time that patients suffering from these types of anemia, who have a high level of fetal hemoglobin, show milder symptoms of the disease than those with lower levels. Uotil Fibach's breakthrough. tests on substances that stimulate the production of fetal hemoglobin were conducted on monkeys and therefore were very costly and prolonged. The new technique, in which cells are grown in culture, can quickly predict treatment results. Hemoglobin is a protein found in the red cells. In adults, it is composed of two alpha chains and two beta chains. Fetal hemoglobin, however, is composed of two alpha and two gamma chains. As a result of a genetic defect in the gamma chain, a number of serious renetic diseases may result. In sickle-cell anemia (more common in people from Africa, Southeast Asia and the Middle East), the defect occurs in the beta chains. The red cells take the shape of half moons and thus have difficulty bearing vital oxygen to the cells. A defect in the beta chain, causes thalassemia, an anemia disease that affects Arabs and Jews from Kurdistan and necessitates

Eventually, gene therapy could be used to replace the defective gene with a healthy one. But this expensive procedure will not be available to the hundreds of people around the world - most of them in developing countries who suffer from these anemias.

Drug treatment is the answer for most of them. The researchers found that encouraging red cells to produce a large amount of fetal hemoglobin instead of the low level found in the body of a normal adult helps the body overcome the beta-chain defect by creating a gamma chain. They took stem cells from the blood of sick and healthy people, and grew them separately in culture.

Some of these substances were found to stimulate the production of fetal hemoglobin. Fibacb says the new technique will allow doctors to predict the reaction of a specific patient to a certain treatment. We will thus be able to save patieots from unnecessary and expensive treatments that will not help them."

Meanwhile, a team from the medical school's physiology department worked to better understand the causes of Parkinson's disease, which affects

I to 2 percent of the population over the age of 60. A team headed by Dr. Hagai Bergman discovered that the progressive neurological disease results from the loss of ability of groups of neurons in the brain to process information independently of each other.

The research, which took six years to complete, concentrated on the basal ganglia - islands of gray matter in each one of the lobes of the brain - in animals with Parkinson's and without. Using a technique developed in the medical school, the researchers were able to monitor the activity of a number of neurons simultaneously instead of one at a time.

Micro-electrodes inserted into the basal ganglia of animals transmitted electric current that the neurons produced. The electrical signals were boosted and sent to a computer, which registered this activity.

In normal animals, each cell sends its information to the outer part of the brain independently; in those with Parkinson's, the basal ganglia worked in synchronization and periodically, causing muscle stiffening and tremors. Applications of this information are being examined, but are still years away. Bergman said.

This must be your first pregnancy if you think you'll have time to do two hours of aerobic exercise soon after delivery. You must rest for a few weeks so your body can recuperate. The standard postpartum recovery period is six weeks, but it can be shorter if you feel well and are not bleeding.

Once you recover, you can resume aerobic exercises - but gradually.

If you drink enough liquids, get a balanced diet with enough vitamins, minerals and calories, and rest enough, your milk sup-ply should be plentiful.

Dr. Amnon Ben-David, director of Magen David Adom's blood services at the National Blood Center at Tel Hashomer, replies:

of one's life and eating moderately are very important. Doing aerobic exercise, such as walking briskly, for at least 20 minutes four or five times a week, increases one s basic metabolic rate, and this benefit continues even after you've stopped exercising. One should not take vigorous exercise (such as swimming) on a full stomach; it is best to rest an hour or two after caong. While timing of exercising and eating may have some marginal effect on the burning of calories, it will not make the difference between overweight and normal weight.

Some people don't eat after 6 p.m., thinking that when they're at rest, calories will burn more slowly.

But in fact, a more important effect is that they are not eating all kinds of junk food in front of the TV set.

"N the beginning - and for millennia after that - people took care of the physically and mentally ill at home. Then, for a few bundred years, the sick were sent to the bospital. Today, the direction is partially back to care in the home and community.

It isn't that hospitals don't perform vital, lifesaving services. But medical costs in these institutions have skyrocketed, the danger of catching infections in the wards has increased, and many patients prefer the familiarity and personal benefits of being at or close to home.

Yad Sarah, which cach year saves the Israeli economy $250 million in bospitalization and medical treatment costs, recently held the first International Conference on Home Care at Jerusalem's International Convention Center. It was attended by about 100 professionals from over a dozen countries, from Cuba to Rassia, and about 200 Israelis.

Although some of the foreign participants had never heard before about Yad Sarah, they quickly began to appreciate it and study its techniques. Founded 20 years ago by Rabbi Uri Lupoliansky when a neighbor asked to borrow a steam vaporizer, it quickly grew as the young teacher purchased additional equipment to lend out.

Its lending of free medical and rehabilitation equipment on a short-term basis is its best-known service, but it also installs emergency beepers in the bomes of the ionely elderly, runs laundry services, provides low-cost transportation to the disabled, offers minimum-charge dental clinics for the elderly, operates day-care centers for the handlcapped and even teaches the homebound how to work a computer, care for plants and tell their life story for recording.

Dr. Knight Steel, director of the Homecare Institute and a geriatrie specialist at Hackensack University Medical Center in New Jersey, said during his first visit to Israel that although the Yad Sarah model is "breathtaking," it would be very difficult to adopt it in most parts of the world, including the US.

Israelis are still like a family. They return medical equipment in good condition. In New York, for example, this wouldn't happen. And you'd never get the oumber of volunteers that you have here, where Yad Sarah's 4,000 unpaid workers makes it the largest volunteer organization in the country.

Steel noted that home care to the sick and elderly is a $30 billion a year business in the US, and health management organizations almost always rely on profit-making service providers rather than volunteer help. He added that "one of the forces century, this demographic miracle carries with it the need to re-think where, what and how health-care services are to be delivered if they are to be not only effective and concentration of populations in the cities and the accelerated aging process - with people over 85 the fastest-growing age group - are the two most fundamental demographic changes in the world. Suiting home care to these needs is thus very important.

Prof. Kalman Mann, head of Yad Sarah's presidium and a longtime former director-general of the Hadassah Medical Organization, said "it is essential to find a solution to these pressing problems before the collapse of medical services in two or three decades.

Hospital care can partially be replaced by the home and salaried workers by volunteers.

High technology is easing this challenge. Phone lines linking Yad Sarah's emergency beepers to its headquarters 24 hours a day put those living alone in touch if they need urgent help.

Doctors in hospitals will be able to see patients via video to consult about their treatment without them having to travel long distances. Private emergency-care services such as Shahal put heart and asthma patients in direct phone contact with doctors who monitor their cardiac activity and breathing with over-the-phone SCEISOTS.

Dr. Arie Roth of lehilov Hospital's cardiology department said Shahal subscribers tend to call for help soon after feeling symptoms instead of waiting for hours to seek help. They also have improved self-confidence in themselves and their health.

A team from the Hadassah-University Hospital on Mt. Scopus in Jerusalem and from Knpat Holim Clalit's geriatric medicine department reported that bome care is not a magic pill to medicine's problems.

"Long-term bome-care patients do not live longer, do not function more independently, do oot express greater satisfaction and do not stay out of mursing homes longer than routine-care counterparts," they said.

However, short-term health care can be very beneficial: treating patients with hip fracture, giving chemotherapy or cancer-pain alleviation, and even providing intravenous antibiotic therapy for patients with chronie problems can be very successful at home. Melabev social worker Leah Abramowitz reported on the success of the organization's community frameworks for elderly demented patients; these give exhausted family members a temporary rest.

She also noted that grandchildren were usually glad to have an invalid grandparent living in their home.

In most cases, the children quickly adjusted without stress to the invalid's presence and regarded it as normal. Many families cope very well with a chronic elderly patient in the home, gaining both satisfaction and a sense of accomplishment that they're able to maintain their loved ones at home, Abramowitz said.

Yehuda Nir, a pensioner who has been living in the Shikun Kiryat Moshe compound in Jerusalem for 45 years, discussed this unique project, in which dozens of elderly persons live in their original homes instead of going to an old-age home.

They pay a very reasonable fee to be watched over by a professional house-father reached around the clock by beeper. Emergency medical care can be summoned, errands can be performed and a restaurant staffed by volunteers supplies a hot lunch if members cannot cook by therhselves.

There are also group social activities, including trips, crafts and movies.

Complementary medicine is more common than thought

EOPLE who go to complementary-medicine practitioners also go to physicians for diagnosis, thus non-medical techniques should be regarded as. complementary and not as "alternatives" to conventional care. This was the conclusion of a study at the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School and the School of Public Health and Community Medicine in Jerusalem.

Netanyahu's challenge premier-elect Binyamin Netanyahu. What he has wrought is the most stunning political upset in Israel's history, surpassing even the 1977 toppling of the Labor government. Thanks to the new election system whose passage was made possible by Netanyahu's vote in defiance of his own party - he is now the first Israeli leader to receive a direct popular mandate and an outright majority.

What must please Netanyahu most is that despite the very close vote, he led Prime Minister Shimon Peres by more than 11 percent in the Jewish population. Since the central issue in this election has been the security, size, and future of the Jewish state, this is a significant fact. The result should help stem the trend against the state's Jewish identity.

Israel is a Jewish state, not just a state which happens to have a Jewish majority. That Labor officials such as Deputy Education Minister Micha Goldman have suggested changing the national anthem and even the flag to accommodate the country's non-Jewish citizens may have had something to do with the repudiation of the Labor government, Netanyabu must be pleased, too, by his success in overcoming the most formidable array of world leaders and media pundits ever mobilized to help an Israeli politician. Particularly untoward and improper was the US administration's open intervention in an ally's democratic election. In a move as unprecedented as it was distasteful, President Bill Clinton implied most likely on the advice of the Middle East team he inherited from the Bush administration - that a vote for Netanyahu was a vote against peace. His ambassador in Tel Aviv has been acting – as one of the most prominent Jewish-American leaders put it yesterday – "more like

TOW that the counting of the votes has ended, congratulations are in order to only improper, but unwise. At least some Israelis resent heing treated as citizens of a protectorate.

> A much more positive note was struck by Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole, who said after the elections, "With so much focus on the democratic process in Israel, a central fact has been overlooked: the fate of peace in the Middle East is not simply up to Israel. In Israel, both major parties and both candidates support peace. They have different approaches, but their goals are the same: a secure Israel living within recognized borders and at peace with all her neighbors. Likud's platform, for example, states clearly: 'Peace will be a central aim of Israel's policy'... I well understand Likud's emphasis on 'peace through strength' and I am confident I can work closely with the next Israeli prime minister."

But Dole's sensible words have been drowned in the quasi-hysterical chorus of anti-Netanyahu voices, and many seem to believe that his election bodes the end of the peace process. If anything, the opposite is true. The government's plans have included allowing the establishment of a Palestinian state in Judea, Samaria, and Gaza, the division of Jerusalem (the blueprints for which have been developed by Labor's "100 day team"), and the complete evacuation of the Golan. Such steps would have been a sure prescription for war.

Netanyahu's challenge is to convince the West that hope for peace lies in transforming the region's regimes into democracies, not in appeasing its tyrants. A dozen years ago he was able to persuade Washington to change its policies on international terrorism. One should like to hope that he will be as successful in affecting its policies on the Middle East.

THE election campaign and its outcome have demonstrated that the Israeli public is more divided than ever before. The television and radio advertisements of both major parties ignored the problem, and neither conflict among Israelis. Binyamin Netanyahu nor Shimon Peres mentioned the internal threat to national survival in their key debate. The emotional words beard after the tragedy of the Rabin assassination on tolerance and the need to develop bridges between left and right and between the religious and secular segments of Jewish society were all forgotten.

With such bitter divisions over critical issues, it will be difficult for either leader to govern effectively with a narrow coalition.

The first priority of the new prime minister should not be directed externally, toward the Palestinians or Syria, but rather inwardly, toward restoring a sense of national unity and overcoming. the deep bittemess and distrust.

Under such conditions, any decisions taken by a narrow government with a minimal majority will be fiercely contested by the opposition, and only cause further division.

In his election campaign, Peres. understood that even with a majority he would need the wider legitimacy provided by a referendum to complete agree-. ment on final status with the Palestinians, and over the issue of withdrawal from the Golan Heights.

ANCY Miner, reports The Washington Post, wanted to give birth to her baby at home. The fact that she was 39, that this was her first child, that that this was no electricity in her "rustic Middleburg cottage" did not daunt her. Assisting her were ber husband, a friend, and a lay nidwife. During delivery, the baby's umbilical cord became compressed. The baby died. The midwife has now been charged with manslaughter. Lay midwifery is not certified and not legal in Virginia, but the midwife's lawyer says she should not be held liable because she was simply doing what the par-ents wanted. I'm with the lawyer. If there were real justice in this world, it is the parents who would be in the dock, charged with criminal self-indulgence. "This case is all about the rights of parents to make decisions about the welfare of their children," says Erin Pulham, a nurse and member of Maryland Friends of Midwives. Welfare of the chil-dren? If Nancy Miner had had the slightest concern about the welfare of her child, she would have had her child in a hospital where, when the breech birth and compressed cord was discovered, she could have had an emergency Csection and a good chance of saving her child.

Should parents have the choice about the health care of their newborn?" asks Fulham thetorically. Of course. But the Miners choice, as the subsequent tragedy proved, was hardly about the newborn's health care. It was about the mother's karma. It was about the narcissistic pursuit of experience," the me generation's insistence on turning every life event - even those franght with danger for others - into a personalized Hallmark moment.

Miner protests in her own defense that "everyone was born at home a generation ago, Now they act like it is outrageous." More like 80 years ago, but no matter. Yes, 80 years ago babies were born at borne. And they died in droves, Almost one in 10 newboms died then. Less than one in 100 does now.

YES, childbirth used to be natural. But so was the accompanying death, disability, deformiry, and disease. A parent's duty is to avoid these "natural" phenomena by all possible means. Today we have those means. They are called modern medicine. The whole natural childbirth phenomenon is an astonishing triumph of ideology over experience. Pain is normally something bumans my to avoid. And the pain of childbirth is among life's most searing. It is also, today, entirely unnecessary. My older brother was born 50

The man behind the new image

By HANNA ROSIN

ark Helprin tells a lot of stories, and they are all true. This includes the story the New York novelist scripted for Bob Dole in his singing resignation speech, the one in which Dole transformed himself from a senator into "a private citizen, a Kansan, an American, just a man." Or so Helprin says. "There is a desire among some members of the press to spin it as no big deal, not really Bob Dale but some clever guy he got to write some speech, and that's not true," he explains. "The only thing I did was clean the window, so that the man that be actually is can be seen. He wrote that speech with the pen of his life."

TOUCHY

Truth is a touchy subject for Helprin, because someone once called him a liar, and he says it ruined his career. In April 1991, the novelist Paul Alexander wrote a ptofile of Helprin in The New York Times Magazine called "Big Books, Tall Tales," in which he accused Helprin of proffering phony tales about his own life. Helprin has claimed, among other things, that his mother was once sold into slavery and that at the tender age of 13 he was almost killed by a Pakistani immigrant in Jamaica.

Helprin could have teased Alexander for missing his jokes or said that he'd merely touched up the truth for effect. Instead, he used the three-month, 10,000-mile, 14-city book tour for his novel "A Soldier of the Great War" to refute the Times piece, point by point. He got the Paris Review to publish documents: crew records from the M.V. Stonepool to prove he was, indeed, in the British Merchant Navy, and a hand-scrawled doctor's note from one A_ Chaplan who verified that "during the summer (of) 1960, I was summoned by your father to attend your wounds following an assault." "Even though the magazine piece that questioned my honesty was false," Helprin told the Paris Review, "I was ashamed to be taken for the kind of person it portrayed."

FURY

It's hard to fathom Helprin's deadpan fury. By all accounts, he is the Ali Baba nf the Hudson Valley, compulsively telling the wildest of tales, daring his audience to doubt him. One fellow novelist suggests that Helprin's ceaseless tale-spinning is designed to "deepen the confusion" and "circumvent legitimate questions about his past. When you've lied a few times, and there's no way out, you just lie some more." Consider Helprin's many stories about his own bravado. Since The New York Times Magazine profile, he's been known to turn his book readings into magic shows, in which he dazzles the audience with barely believable stories, like the one about the Swiss ambassador whipping out a pistol during dinner. In a talk before a group of West Point

There's no question that Helprin's speech renewed Dole; it gave the mumbler a voice and the flat campaign some texture.

caders, Helprin bravely confessed that his decision to skip Vietnam should be called hy its true name -- "dodging the draft." Then, at the end of the short speech, he told a story: one day, he found himself on his way to Israel, "in a fury to put myself on the line." What he actually did on the line the soldiers will never know: "Someday you will find yourself in a terrible place, about to die from a wound that is too big for a pressure bandage, or you may find yourself in an enemy prison, facing years of torture, or you may find yourself, more likely, as I did, in a freezing rainsoaked trench, at four o'clock in the morning, listening to your heartbeat like thunder as you stare into the hallucinatory darkness of a field sown with mines." In this series of haunting images the drenched man is the same as the dying man. Helprin's true confession about Vietnam is blotted out, and the rear guard infantryman who served one year of non-combat dury in the Israeli army is transformed into a purple heart hero.

STORYTELLING

What does Helprin's storytelling mean for Bob Dole? Helprin the fantastical novelist is also a committed conservative - a contributing editor at the Wall Street Journal, a member of the right-wing Hudson Institute. While be bas not been hired as a speechwriter for the Dole campaign, and took nn fee for the resignation speech, he is voluntarily spinning a sunny plot line for his party's candidate. ("Dole could fit in one of my books," he told The Washington Post.) This new Dole "has become enthusiastic now; his temperament is virtually perfect, spectacular, ruled by courage and quietude," says Helprin.

But it's hard in remake a man with a 50year public history. Dole shares more in common with Helprin's characters - the nameless veteran in "Memoir from an Antproof Case" and Alessandro Giuliani in "A Soldier of the Great War" - than Helprin would like m admit. All are warriors who "at least three times" were "about to be taken into the arms of God," as Helprin wrote this week about Dole in Newsweek. But the experience gave them mare than just "faith" and "courage." It left them offkilter and bitter, seething with mordant wit. "You may run quadruple marathons and do one-armed handstands, but only blink, look up, and see yourself hobbling about like a bent insect half crushed under a heavy heel," says the acerbic soldier in "Memoir," sounding remarkably like the Dole we all know.

There's no question that Helprin's speech renewed Dole; it gave the mumblet a voice and the flat campaign some texture. But Dole's tears were sincere to the extent that the story was not true. They flowed, most likely, not because he was a new man, yearning to "look to.America," but because he was mourning the loss of the crusty old one, the dealmaking Dole, the real Dole it was time to sacrifice. And, like it or not, this Dole who delves in the negative is the one who rings true - and, incidentally, offers the best antidote to Clinton's glibness.

and the league requires three assumptions that should be fleshed out. The first is that some values are more important than the conviction of a guilty defendant, even one guilty of murder. The second is that an exclusionary rule - a rule keeping the jury from hearing highly relevant and truthful information - is sometimes justified. And the third is that the First Amendment rests on "pillars of separation between church and state."

Civil libertarians have long argued that constitutional values - such as privacy, freedom from coercinn and the right tn counsel - may sometimes trump the need to convict a guilty person. Conservatives generally dispute this contension, arguing that convicting the guilty is the paramount job of our legal system, which sbould be devoted to the search for truth, and not m furthering other values. Yet in this case, Buckley and the league insist on subordinating the search for truth to the sanctity of the confessional. They would argue that the sanctity of the confessional is more important than the values embodied in our Fnurth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments. Reasonable people could take either side of that debate, but the important point is the broader one: namely, that both sides now seem to agree that there are snme values that may be more important than the search for truth and the convictinn of a specific criminal.

Civil libertarians also recognize the need m enforce these transcendent values by sometimes excluding evidence obtained in violannn of these values, even if that evidence is truthful and highly incriminating. Conservatives generally mock the exclusionary rule, as Buckley has done on numerous nccasinns. But in this case, Buckley and the league demand that this truthful confession be excluded from evidence.

Finally, civil libertarians demand the separation of church and state as a way of preserving the integrity of both institutions, as well as protecting individual liberty. Conservatives, especially, many religinus conservatives, denigrate this wall of separation. But in this case, Buckley worries that the "pillars of separation" may be torn down if this confession is used in court.

This all goes to show that the Bill of Rights is truly for everyone. In this case the ACLU, William Buckley, the Cathnlic Church and the Catholic League are all on the same side. Thrugh they are defending the tights of a devil, they are on the side of angels.

Perhaps this case will help skeptical conservatives understand the importance of civil liberties for all Americans. The same Bill of Rights which accords certain rights to gays, atheists, communists, and women seeking abortions, guarantees the right of a Catholic prisonet to confess to a priest without the prosecution being able to use that confession against him in a court of law.

Admiral's death adds to media vs. military

By CHARLES LANE

Who really killed Admiral Jeremy M. "Mike" Boorda? "The media," says Retired Adm. Elmo "Bud" Zumwalt, Newsweek and others who investigated the validity of Boorda's Vietnam-era decorations "are guilty of a homendous crime." "At some point," adds Sen. Bob Smith of New Hampshire, "the continuing quest for a story can give way to relentless, unwarranted persecution."

. Whatever other consequences it may have, Boorda's suicide seems destined to pass into military lore as further proof that journalists are a bunch of sharks-thus aggravating the already-strained relations between the press and the military. This mutual antagonism is largely a clash of institutional cultures: the irreverent, disclosure-oriented, individualistic press vs. the hierarchical, secret-keeping, collectivist military. To compound the contrast, the abolition of the draft ensured that fewer reporters have personal military experience while career officers are increasingly the creatures of their own all-volunteer realm. And each of these two institations likes to think its peculiar

Foundation, whose contributions to human understanding include a dubious study about a world-wide shortage of human sperm. Given this background, it's hard to see why the news service is routinely characterized as "nonpartisan."

And Newsweek should have thought twice about allowing Colonel David Hackworth to handle the Boorda story. (Full disclosure statement: Newsweek was my employer for over six years.) As a contributing editor at the magazine, Hackworth enjoys unusual deference and freedom of action regarding things military because of his own distinguished Army combat record. But he is a highly controversial figure within the military. Some respect "Hack's" decision to quit the Army in 1971 and go public with his criticism of the Viemam effort; others see his "about-face" as a ploy to divert attention from his own problems, which included Army allegations, later dropped, that he had improperly spirited gambling winnings out of Vietnam, As a journalist, Hackworth

As a journalist, Hackworth has continued his battle with the "brass"; corruption in military awards has been one of his pet peeves. Before the magazine's scheduled interview with Boorda, "Ackworth was heard to boast that cers and civilian Pentagon officials leak stories calculated to help their friends and undetmine their enemies. In fact, there wouldn't be much reporting about the internal workings of the Pentagon without leaks. Certainly there would never have been a story about Boorda's medals unless someone—probably someone inside the Navy—had gone to the National Security News Service with the tale.

AMERICAN OUTLOOK

Durachur

If Boorda despaired of ever being able to clear his name, it was probably not only for fear of the press. As he typed his suicide note, he must have realized that the knives were out for him within his own scandal-ridden and divided service and that those determined to bring him down would exploit the medals story to spread even more dirt. Probably, Boorda was never fully embraced by the naval aviators and Annapolis grads who daim custodianship of the service's elire culture. He was a former enlisted man who became an officer through a special program; a personnelman" known for fostering the careers of women and minorities. And he had been picked for Chief (over an Annapolis aviator, Admiral Charles Larson) by a politically correct, "draft-dodging" presidenć.

- S- -More recently, indications abounded that a vocal anti-Boorda minority was trying to generate a "traditionalist" backlash. In August 1995 the Naval Institute's scholarly journal, Proceedings, published a satire depicting a future Navy crippled by gender sensitivity and environmentalism-this dystopia was set aboard the "U.S., Boorda." Hundreds of midshipmen, retired flag-rank officers and Navy supporters responded to Webb's tirade with a standing ovation, according to Navy Times. (Interestinely enough, it was Webb, not the National Security News Service, who seems to have invented the practice of investigating medals; as secretary, he verified the decorations of every officer who came before him for promotion.) The inquiry into Mike Boorda's medals, then, was the result of an improbable convergence of these disparate interests: a left-wing warchdog group; a profitseeking, insufficiently informed but essentially responsible magazine; and some self-appointed guardians of "military values" from the former-officer ranks. All of these people justified their actions by saying that putting Mike Boorda under the microscope might help shape up the Navy and advance the public interest. And they probably sincerely believed than Indeed, only a month ago Boorda himself had told a Naval Academy audience that tough coverage can sometimes help the service "get better." What none of Boorda's inquisitors could imagine was that a man who sat at the pinnacle of American military life would literally rather die than face that kind of scrutiny himself. For both soldiers and scribblers, the lesson, if any, of the affair is this: media coverage can't "destroy" a military institution, or a military officer, unless that institution, or that person, is already being torn up from within.

democracy: the press, because it holds the powerful to account; the milicary, because it protects the country's security.

ethic is uniquely vital to American

World War II, when the armed forces and the Fourth Estate cooperated for the sake of victory, was a brief shining moment of harmony. But Vietnam ended that, probably forever. Fed on phony statistics and even phonier forecasts of victory, journalists came to distrust anyone in uniform. For their part, military men blamed their defear---and their own tarnished image---on unfair coverage.

The military swore to refute the "barde of public opinion" during the Gulf war-and it won. Compared to their articulate, crisply attired military briefers, the press corps in Saudi Arabia looked carping and ill-informed. The public, supportive of the war and increasingly skeptical of the media itself, cared little for reporters' complaints about military censorship. In the wake of the Gulf war, the media have taken steps to refine their coverage of the military, and that coverage, the Tailhook sexual harassment scandal notwithstanding, has been largely favorable. Yet for all the glowing stories about Scott O'Grady's heroism, harmonious Army race relations and the like, military men still tend to see journalistic inquiry as a threat and journalists as vaguely unpatriotic.

To be sure, some post-Boorda media soul-searching is in order. One area for reflection concerns the National Security News Service. For the most part, news organizations have checked out the group's stories and disclosed their reliance on its information. The media have been less fortheight about the political agenda of the group's founders and funders. These include Wayne Jaquith, a Boston lawyer, who founded during the '80s the antinuclear Physicians for Social Responsibility, a group that welcomed the cooperation of a KGBcontrolled Soviet counterpart organization. They also include the leftist, pro-disarmament W. Alton Jones his story would cost Boorda his job. He has even admitted to "musing" that the story might cause the admiral to "put a gun to his head." Such braggadocio aside, Hackworth's passions, uncontradicted by anyone at the magazine with comparable experience, may have led Newsweek's edirors to exaggerate the importance of the Boorda story. But, as the involvement of an old Army warrior like Hackworth suggests, the Boorda case cannot be reduced to a simple story of kneejerk anti-military bias. Roger Charles, the National Security News Service's researcher, was a former military officer, too.

Overzealous and wrongheaded or not, Hackworth and Charles seem to have been motivated at least in part by the belief that rooting out misfeasance would strengthen the military institutions they once served. Moreover, Newsweek acteu responsibly by seeking comment from Boorda well in advance of publishing any story. The magazine dispatched Washington bureau chief Evan Thomas and defense specialist John Barry to interview Boorda; both are serious journalists and, if anything, somewhat pro-Pentagon. Given the purported ambiguity about his right to the decorations, it is a mystery why Boorda didn't at least try to explain his side of the murky story to these two journalists. The admiral's suicide note, which apparently expressed the auguished belief that any explanation he might give would be distorted in the press, simply should not be taken as the last word on the question. John Barry himself has said that he considered the medals story "gotcha journalism" and might have recommended dropping it.

Which raises another crucial issue: the hypocrisy embedded in so much military griping about the media. Not only do officers try to manipulate the hated press to get favorable coverage for this combat unit or that weapons system. Like everyone else in Washington, offi-

AMERICAN OUTLOOK

BY ROBERT NOVAK

President Clinton, hardly known for reluctance to use the telephone, created a stir on Capitol Hill and Wall Street for not making one phone call to Democratic Sen. Tom Harkin to insist that he stop blocking three Federal Reserve Board nominations, including Alan Greenspan's reappointment for a third term as chairman. On Tuesday night, he finally made the call after this column was written and distributed on the wires.

This little fact suggests that Clinton could be playing a game of infinite deviousness in quest of rich rewards. Having pleased bond traders by renominating conservative Republican Greenspan, would Clinton now tacitly consent to holding him hostage to influence his behavior deterring further interest-rate increases indefinitely? Or, more improbably, would he delay the process to await a Democratic Senare that would confirm the Fed chairman he really wants? Nobody in authority would admit this, and that it is now being speculated could end the dangerous game. But Fed watchers take it seriously, and many Democrats on Capitol Hill hope it's true.

Why, I asked Harkin on Monday, no personal plea from the president? "I don't really know," replied the populist from Iowa, who added: "I have had a lot of calls." Who from? Treasury Secre-tary Robert Rubin, White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta, but not the president. Coincidentally or not, Clinton finally called Harkin Tuesday night.

The word around the Senate Democratic cloakroom is that the only reason any calls are being made is the extreme agitation of Alice Rivlin, whose reluctant acceptance of Clinton's nomination as Fed vice chairman has made her the lame-duck Office of Management and. Budget director, "Alice is furious," a knowledgeable Capitol Hill Democrat rold me.

The bond market was happier than Democrats about the nomina-tions of Greenspan, Rivlin and economist Laurence Meyer to the Fed's board of governors. Supported by Democratic colleagues, Harkin has blocked confirmation since March 27.

Harkin demands a Senate debate on Greenspan that would last at least three days. Why three days? Because that's the time the Senate, spent debating the nomination of Dr. Henry Foster as surgeon general before Democrats gave up trying to seek the 60 votes needed to cut off debate. If the Senate can talk for three days about a "ceremonial" post, Harkin contends, it surely can debate whether the Greenspan-

The temptation to compare Newt Gingrich and Trent Lott is irresistible. The Speaker of the House and the Mississippi senator came to Congress in the 1970s as southern firebrands, out to shake up the amiable Midwesterners who ran the House. Of course, Democrats can't stand either one of them. But both Gingrich and Lott are popular among their GOP colleagues. Republican moderates in the House love Gingrich. He's fair to them. Lott enjoys comparable affection on the Senate side. That's why he's all but certain to replace Bob Dole as Majority Leader. Lott has more than 20 senators saying that they'll suppott him over his opponent, fellow

Mississippian Thad Cochran, who is promising what he described to me as "the right tone, a need to be warmer." Most members, though, aren't buying Cochran's fuzzies. Take Jim Jeffords, the Senate's most liberal Republican.
The Vermonter sings in a quartet with Lott, the "Vocal Majority," which belts out country tunes "like "Elvira" by the Oak Ridge Boys. When Lott introduces him on stage he calls Jeffords "the gentleman way to my left." The humot is gentle, not pointed. Jeffords supports Lott. The rise of Lott opens the way for a fascinating chapter in this already-fascinating election: Let's Make a Deal, Round II. In the coming months, we may see strange alliances that leave congressional Democrats (incumbents and challengers) and Dole on one side and Clinton, Lott and Gingrich on the other side.

How? Consider how we got where we are. When the Republicans took over Congress they assumed that they could ram their agenda past the White House. Clinton, they figured, would cave in on everything from tax cuts to regulatory overhaul. They misjudged spectacularly. Clinton not only stood up to the GOP, but as the public came to think of Gingrich and his minions as extremists. After 13 stopgap continuing resolutions, the Republicans and Clinton arrived at a deal for this year's budget nine months late. That's where things stand now that negotiations for next year's budget have begun. Most people in the White House and on the Hill think a hudget deal for next year, let alone a multi-year package. is unlikely. "It won't happen. I tell you," says a senior Clinton adviser. Maybe. But Dole's departure makes the calculus for a deal look

Clinton's adviser Dick Morris are longtime friends. Morris counseled Lott's two Senate races. When Lott made his maiden run at the Senate in 1988, his Democratic opponent took him to task for having a black chauffeur. Lott . came back with the devastating response in which the man in question, George Awkward, explained that he was guarding Lott, who was then a member of the House leadership. "I'm nobody's chauffeur," Awkward told the cameras. Lott won. During last year's hudget ordeal, Lott and Morris held a series of secret backchannel meetings and phone calls that are documented in Elizabeth Drew's Showdown. The two were trying to figure out ways to get their respective sides to comptomise. When their cover was hlown, the talks shut down. Now that Lott's about to be the top dog, can these two avoid talking? Morris insists that there's no clandestine schmoozing. "I haven't spoken to Trent since Dole stepped down," Morris told me—a less-than-convincing demurral. (Imagine if Bush adviser Boh Teeter said that he hadn't talked to Richard Gephardt in a week.) "We're trying to ratchet back our relationship." Ratchet away, but it's hard to imagine Morris, who shared confidential polling data with the Dole campaign, being able to contain himself.

Why should he? A deal would he in Lott's interest and Clinton's because ... Lott could use a deal. Right now, Republican House and Senate candidates are getting clobbered. The association with Gingrich is killing them. They're fumbling for words, desperate to explain that they only meant to control Medicare's growth. However unfairly, the public's not buying it. But, if Lott and Clinton strike a deal, the extremist label is gone. No Democrat will be able to tar his GOP opponent as a right-wing nut if he's signing a ers on bills next year. Why would Clinton cave after his successful steadfastness? Because ...

Clinton could use a deal, too. If Clinton cuts a deal with the Lott-Gingrich Congress, he would deprive Dole of his two higgest weapons. First, Dole would no longer be able to run as a "doer." If he's such a can-do guy, why couldn't he get a deal? The other weapon that would be lifted from Dole's hands is the tax-and-spend argument. If the GOP Congress signs off on a Clinton hudget, how can Dole skewer Clinton as a free-spender?

I grant that this scenario requires an astonishing level of cynicism. Lott and Gingrich would essentially be cutting Dole loose, separating their fortunes from his. And Clinton would be jettisoning the congressional Democrats who benefit from running against the "extremist" Republicans. But is this so implausible? Remember "triangulation." For Morris, it means that Clinton should stand equidistant from the Republicans and the Democrats, like a triangle's peak. Those centrist, Morris-designed issues -- school uniforms, for example -- have served Clinton well. But what's really buoyed the president has been the old-fashioned, Stephanopoulos-Ickes advice to veto Medicare cuts. Now may be the time. for a new triangulation, a new geometry, that leaves Dole cornered.

PRODUCED BY: CHICAGO SUN-TIMES FEATURES SYNDICATE led central bank ought to target economic growth at 2.5 percent in order to stave off inflation. Harkin, seeking re-election, would argue in Senare debate that an easier money policy would mean economic growth, prosperity and jobs.

With Bob Dole trying to emphasize the need for growth, Republican senators are not anxious for a protracted debate in which they would have to defend growth-resistant bond traders. Thus, the GOP leadership has taken the view that it is pretty much up to the president whether the Fed confirmations are pursued.

The delay already has rewarded Clinton. There was not much, chance that this week's Federal Open Market Committee meeting would raise the federal funds rate to curb inflation, hut careful Fed watchers believe the chairman's non-confirmation eliminated this possibility for the foreseeable future (much to the dismay of antiinflation hawks).

The clock starts running on Greenspan's new four-year term as chairman only from the point that the Senate actually confirms him. That could come so late this year that Clinton, even if re-elected, would have less than a year left for his own Fed chairman if he desired one.

Thus, this most and acious scenario: With time running out, the Senate never gets to confirm Greenspan. Clinton is re-elected, Democrats regain control of the Senate and the president names the Fed chairman he really wants for his full second term (presumably renominating Rivlin and Meyer). It's remote in view of the president's belated call to Tom Harkin, but not out of the question.

Advanced Photography A look at the 'Little Corporal' System is on the rise ON CAMERA

OOKING for a new world to explore in photography? How about Advanced Photography System (APS)? It's coming over the borizon and risiog fast,

DAVID BRAUNER

APS is the photographic wave of the future: faster, more flexible and, above all, smaller than the 35-millimeter format. But with an estimated 600 million 35 mm. cameras in use around the world, traditional photography will not become extinct overnight.

The new, bighly pocketable cameras are about 30 percent smaller than today's models. The reduction in size is made possible because APS film is only 24 mm. wide.

The print sizes vary; the stan-dard snapshot "C" format (10x15 centimeters); a new larger "H print" (10x18 cm.) and a long panoramic "P" format (10x29 cm.). Film will he available in 15-25- and 40-exposure lengths. Only color print film in Hi/Lo (faster/slower) speeds is on the market. Slide and monochrome films are not yet planned.

At the core of APS is an entirely new cartridge. No film leader sticks out. The 24-mm. cartridge functions like a mini-engine, converting rotary camera motion into linear movement to carry film forward and backward. The cartridge is built to be reused up to 50 times, and parts may be recycled.

The new product is designed to interact or "talk" with "dedicated" cameras. Not only does the cartridge's "A" eod tell the camera the speed of the film - as does today's DX system - but also which frames have been exposed. It means that without noting the frame number, one can change films mid-roll, replace the cartridge and the camera automatically advances the film to the correct position.

Because processed films are returned in the cartridge, there are four Visual Exposure Indicators. (VEI icons) on the "B" end to inform the user that the film is "unexposed," "exposed," "par-tially exposed" or "processed." In addition to individual

TAPOLEON'S streak of victories stops when his enemies adopted his own methods and ways of thinking. This is the lesson Hezi Shelah drew out of his study of Napoleon Bonaparte's military career. His Napoleon 1813 - Milhemet Ho'olam Harishona ("The First World War," published by Keter, 338 pp.) is probably the only work in Hebrew by an Israeli student of the "Little Corporal" who had become, briefly, the master of Europe nearly two centuries

The first global war, maintains Shelah, was fought 100 years before World War L The wars that preceded it were generally fought mainly by mercenaries. But when some of Europe's monarchs sent troops to support the deposed king of France, the revolutionary leaders riposted by enlisting enthusiastic civilians into a national army. This host was able to chase the invaders out of France.

Intoxicated by their success, the French national army continued its drive, declaring a crusade to spread the creed of Revolution and better the world.

Napoleon Bonaparte himself was product of the revolucion. A professional soldier who had learned his trade in military academies since the age of nine, he considered himself a Jacobin; his heroes and protectors were Marat and Robespierre.

Provincial France considered him the epitome of the Great Revolution even after he had crowned himself emperor.

He left his native Corsica when he was 20 in the wake of local squabbles and joined the French artillery corps. In 1793, he quelled a royalist uprising in Toulon. He barely escaped execution following the end of Robespierre.

In 1795 he considered seeking service with some foreign power, when Barras of the executive Directory, assigned him to put an end to a mass royalist rebellion in Paris. As a reward, he was appointed head of the republic's internal forces, a post which he used to enforce his ideas about law and order.

Two years later, he was appointed head of the army of Italy, a wedding present for him and Josephine Beauhamais, formerly Barras's

BEYOND FRANCE'S frontiers, Napoleon's troops were greeted, because their arrivalspelled Freedom, Revolution, Hope. Disenchantment came later, but Napoleon was hardly aware of it. For him, power was the ability to change, and change he did, logically, drastically, changes that remained permanent when he oo mistress.

Bonaparte was at work creating a new army.

It was not the "intifada" attacks which brought Napoleon to his his knees; his downfall was due to military defeats and political miscalculation.

His new army had 175,000 men; industry was working overtime to replace the guns lost in Russia. What the new army lacked was cavalry, practically all the horses which look part in the Russian campaign did not return home. Another senous handicap was the lack of dependable, experienced NCOs.

The enemy Napoleon now faced was Russia. He imagined himself the defender of Europe against the tsar, expecting to thwart him on the river Nemen. In vain, Caulaincourt, a former ambassador to St. Petersburg, warned him that Europe was afraid at that juncture not of Russia but of France.

It was Prussia which led the allied campaign against Napoleon. All through the summer of 1813, hostilities raged in Central Europe. Napoleon won one major banle, but three important engagements led by his marshals were lost. These enhanced the morale of the Allies - who took op the initiative.

THE DECISIVE battle was fought near Leipzig: the Battle of the Nations, which involved 350,000 men and 2,300 artillery pieces. At the end of four days, the Grande Armee acknowledged defeat.

The war was then carried to French soil. Napoleon won some brilliant engagements, but trend was clear. Paris itself was tom by internal rivalries. Talleyrand, Napoleon's former dovish foreign minister, hatched intrigues against the emperor. Most of his military chiefs also turned their backs on their hero.

Paris fell, and Tsar Alexander and Friedrich Wilhelm III of Prussia led a victory parade in the French capital. A few days later, Napoleon, in Fontainebleau, signed a letter of resignation. The Allies sent him with full honors to live on the island of Elba.

He did not consider himself beaten, though. Hardly a year later, he was back in France, which he ruled for 100 days. But, in June 1815, "the curtain rose on the last act of Napoleon's military drama, Shelah writes. It was the Battle of Waterloo, at the end of which Bonaparte surrendered to the British.

ANY cats have a habit of clawing rugs and fur-niture. Providing a scratching post - a wooden upright covered io nubby carpet or straw matting - may keep felines from damaging furniture, but many cats insist on scratching sofas, carpets or drapes anyway. Some veterinary surgeons recommend removing the cat's claws, a procedure which readers frequently write to this column to ask about. Declawing cats is not new; people have been doing it for ages, but it has become more common in receot decades. Part of the increase is due to more and more people keeping cats, which are easier to keep in apartments than dogs. The operation is not complicated, it is done under general anesthetic and does not take long. The cat usually wakes up and is taken bome after about an hour.

But there are some definite drawbacks. Once declawed, a cat will never grow claws again. It will be totally defenseless against other cats in the neighborhood, so it must never be let out of the house or apartment; those that do get out usually come to an unfortunate end.

The declawing also changes a cat's natural graceful walk, and its feet are floppy and less cat-like.

Some people claim that declawing changes a cat's personality. Never having had a declawed cat, I cannot verify whether it is true, but it seems reasonable to say it could be. While visiting Milan's zoo some 30 years ago, 1 noted that all the lions, tigers and leopards were declawed and their canine incisors had been removed. They looked terrible.

THE DECISION on whether to declaw a cat rests with its owner. One question to consider is this: Just how far are we to allow ourselves to go in order to exploit the animal world? There is a big difference to prevent unwanted animal births and the suffering of many homeless animals - and performing a surgical mutilation for our own comfort. This also applies to the less-common practice of debarking dogs by operating on the vocal cords.

between spaying and neutering

If you are afraid of pets damaging furniture, there are plenty of animals which are more suitable. Keeping an aquarium, aviary or terrarium can be a pleasant pastime, as can keeping dogs, cavies and hamsters.

Some people still say they prefer cat, which makes one wonder just how fond they are of cats, as opposed to an idealized picture of what kind of pet a cat should be. Genuine cat fanciers like the cat specifically for what it is. One animal behaviorist described his feelings this way: "If I were the Almighty and wanted to make an animal, I'd make a cat."

The scientist, like so many people, felt that a cat was just about the most perfect animal in the world, claws and all.

Jazz forces 7th game with romp over Sonics

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - The Utah Jazz took cootrol right from the start and came up with yet another blowout to force the first Game 7 of this year's NBA playoffs, defeating the Seattle Super-Sonics 118-83.

Karl Malone had 32 points, 10 rebounds and seven assists, Jeff Horoacek was as dead-eye as usual with 23 points and even Jobn Stockton coaxed a good game out of his battered body with series-highs of 14 points and 12 assists on Thursday.

"The odds were against us," Malone said. "Nobody expected us to win up there, hut we did. It shows a lot of character about this team.

Utah shot over 60 percent, led by as many as 36 and forced 23 turnovers from a Seattle team that's averaging more than 20 per game in the series.

The fans were as loud as ever and even picked on Gary Payton by derisively chanting his name. At the end, they sent their team off the floor with the last in an almost endless line of standing ovations.

Game 7 is today at Seattle, and Utah will be seeking to become just the sixth team in NBA history to come back from a 3-1 deficit.

"It's just like any other game," Stockton said. "I always try to simplify and make it a one-game series, and that's what we're down to.'

Sitting back and watching are the Chicago Bulls, who woo't play the winner until Wednesday night.

By then, the storyline out of the West will be Malone and Stockton reaching the pinnacle of their careers or the Sonics having avoided a third straight playoff bumiliation.

.As harsh as that seems for Seattle, it certainly would be the case even though the Sonics have made it this far.

Just a few nights ago, they were selling Bulls-Sonics tickets at Key Arena and expecting the imminent arrival of Michael Jordan, Dennis Rodman and the rest of the Bulls.

Then, as Game 5 wound down and went into overtime, everybody but Payton became testame. On Thursday, the breakdown came full circle - no on was beyond blame. . Utah scored the first 12 points of the game, turned it into a laugher early in the fourth quarter and withstood every brief run or hurst of momentum the Sonics managed.

time since November. But to make it to the finals for the first time in franchise history, they'll have to win in a building where the Sonics have lost only five times all seasoo.

The Jazz seemed to get an immediate boost from the energy of the fans, opening their 12-0 lead oo four jumpers and a pair of steals that were turned into fastbreak layups.

Stockton scored his sixth point of the quarter, matching his cotire offensive output of Game 5, on a cutting layup with 4:39 left for a 22-10 lead. Scattle had only five field goals in the quarter and went 10-for-13 from the line to trail 35-22 eotering the secood period.

Bryon Russell, who ended the first quarter with Utah's first 3ad a 360 open the second. Antoine Carr's off-balance jumper from the side made Utah 21-of-29 from the field, and Hornacek's first basket, a 3-pointer with 4:55 left, out the Jazz ahead 52-30. Seattle had its big run a minute and a half later as Perkins hit a trey, Detlef Schrempf had two baskets and a pair of foul shots and Shawn Kemp scored for an 11-0 run that cut the deficit to 11.

Japan, South Korea picked to co-host 2002 World Cup

ZURICH (Reuter) - Japan and South Korea emerged as the first World Cup "winners" of the 21st century on Friday after FIFA surprisingly awarded them the right to co-host the event in 2002.

After years of intense rivalry in which both countries spent hundreds of millions of dollars on their hidding campaigns, FIFA was ultimately unable to decide which country should become the first to stage the event in Asia.

South Korean FIFA vice-president Chung Mong-joon, said the two countries shared an unhappy history. "We have been close but distant neighbors," he said. "I bope this decision can be a milestooe for overcoming our past problems and build a strong understanding for the future."

Chung would not say whether North Korea would be invited to stage matches at the finals but he added that "I hope it can be a catalyst for global peace and for the reunification of both parts of Korea. I am a rather conservative man, and it will take me a couple of days to decide whether I am happy with this decision or not. I hope I am happy."

Japanese hid president Ken Naganuma, also clearly not entirely at ease with the decision, said Japan had bowed to FIFA's executive committee's request for co-hosting.

"However, this preseots us with many problems to solve," he said. "We will do our best to make our efforts bear fruit. It will be the first co-hosted World Cup finals, the first in the 21st century and the first in Asia. We believe it must be a success."

Since it begao in 1930, the World Cup has only heeo staged in either Europe or the Americas. Friday's announcement is a watershed for the game in more ways than one.

It represents a massive blow to the prestige of FIFA's autocratic 80-year-old Brazilian president Joso Havelange who consistently stood against co-hosting.

The move, orchestrated by Lennart Johansson, the Swedish presideot of UEFA, Enrope's niling body, was carried by a majority vote of FIFA's executive committee.

FIFA have now set up a working group headed by vice-presidents Antonio Matarese of Italy, Guillermo Canedo of Mexico and Sepo Blatter, FIFA's general secretary.

It will report back to FIFA's executive committee in Barcelona in December after considering the details of how the competition is to work.

As well as dealing with sensitive issues like the venue for the final and opening ceremooy - or ceremonies - they will also have to examine whether both countries qualify actomatically as hosts and if they do, how that will affect the number of other qualifying Asian nations.

Then there is the question of the planned construction of World Cup stadioms in both South Korea and Japan.

With 32 teams due to take part io 2002, hoth couotries had planned to build 11 grounds and renovate four or five others. Stadium construction was the cornerstone of both their bids.

Clearly, there is no room for 22 oew stadiums and eight or nine modernized ones so both nations will have to reconsider their planned construction programs. Johansson had no doubts FIFA had made the right choice. "It is a victory for common sense and for football," he said.

"There is still six years to go, plenty of time for these matters to be resolved." Other matters that will need to "Matters like where the final will be held are almost irrelevant at the moment, far bigger questions have to be answered first."

One question never in doubt was that both nations produced highly impressive bids.

South Korea's was based on their unrivaled soccer record in Asia, their long love affair with the game and a professional league that has been operating for 13 years compared to Japan's four. They have also qualified for four World Cup finals, while Japan has never done so.

FIFA would also have been influenced by the thought that by giving the World Cup to South Korea, they may help to bring peace to the Korean peninsula.

As well as both offering state of the art stadiums, they also offered excellent communications, infrastructure and safety.

Japan's included their futuristic "Virtual Reality" stadium where a 100-meter long image of a match taking place in one stadium is seen in another - as well as guaranteed growth of the J-League and vast amounts of money invested in the development of the game throughout the world,

Michael Johnsoo, top-ranked in the world at 200 and 400 meters, knows only too well that good vision counts when hugging the curve or, in a staggered start, catching sight of rivals out of the corner of his eye.

"All of those things come into play, so you don't want to be squinting while sprinting," Johnson, who wears contact lenses, said during a visit to Bausch & Lomb loc.'s Opties Center in Rochester.

The 28-year-old track star underwent 12 standardized eye tests to measure visual dexterity - peripberal awareness, accuracy of depth perception, motor reaction time between his eyes and his hands or feet.

The optics and health-care products company, an Olympic sponsor, will offer vision evaluations to all athletes at the Atlanta Games.

"Sports-oriented tests for strength of bone, muscle tone or cardiae performance we're more familiar with." said Dr. Michael Pier, the Olympic Vision Cen-

It will be the fourth Olympics since 1992 in which Bausch & Lomh has tracked the visual strengths and weaknesses of the world's top athletes. Its findings go into a database accessible to sports visioo experts worldwide.

The data "is very important for athletes in all sports, oot just track and field." Johnson said. "That in turn will benefit the regular weekend athlete as well as just the average persoo out there as far as improving their vision."

Jobnson said athletes ofteo don't pay sufficient attention to their cycsight.

Racism is a growing problem in European soccer, spreading to Italy this season with England's Paul Ince and Dutchman Michel Ferrier, who are both black, becoming targets for racial abuse.

Verona fans burnt a black effigy in protest at reports that their club was interested in signing Ferrier and the mayor of Cremona publicly apologized to Ince after home fans insulted him during a Serie A match there.

But England is where the problem is most enneoched, partly because of history, partly because of innate xenophobia. Foreigners and non-whites are considered fair game by hooligans.

Britain's colonial past brought millions of black and Asian immigrants to England's major cities after World War Two.

The arrival of these immigrants' sons on the professional soccer scene coincided with an explosion of booliganism in the 1970s and early 1980s. Far-right groups bent on trouble found a huge pool of young people from which to draw recruits.

The National Front's Bulldog magazine encouraged the throwing of bananas at black players, carried a "League of Louts" column and encouraged hooligans to compete for the title of "most racist ground in Britain."

Clubs such as Chelsea, Leeds and West Ham were hotbeds of racism - an afternooo spent in the popular "Shed" end at Chelsea in the 1970s left many spectators in shock at the Many British clubs were suspiciously slow in signing non-white players and it was only after Viv Andersoo became the first black player picked for England in 1978 that the situatioo slowly began to improve in English grounds.

Disgust at the behavior of Liverpool fans who were blamed for the tragedy at the 1985 European Cup final against Juventus when 39 people - mostly Italian - died, and improvements in stadium security, helped douse the worst excesses.

A recent survey by the Center for the Study of Public Order at Leicester University showed 80 percent of soccer fans believed racism in soccer had declined over the past five years.

England's Football Association last season joined with the Commission for Racial Equality to launch "Let's Kick Racism Out of Football." The campaign featured Frenchman Eric Cantona, banned for eight months last year for kicking a spectator who shouted abuse at him, preaching peace.

The FA will stress tolerance in match programs and advertisements during Euro 96 but says the problem has largely been removed thanks to better stewarding, increased use of close-circuit television and local initiatives to educate fans.

The official line is that foreign teams will be welcomed by English fans at the championship. "They shouldn't have anything to worry about from the English side," a spokesman said

Edberg remains haunted by the 1989 match, which he led two sets to one and 4-2 in the fourth before Chang rallied to win 6-1, 3-6, 46, 64, 6-2.

Chang was clearly burting from midway through the second set yesterday. Looking listless and making uncharacteristic unforced errors, be dropped nine straight games during one stretch to lose the second and third sets.

Chang said he was affected hy the recurrence of a rib cage injury which forced him to pull out of the Italian Open a few weeks ago. But he refused to blame the injury for the defeat.

'It bothered me a little hit in the second set, but it wasn't a problem for me today," Chang said. "I put some heat on it and it was OK. It wasn't a factor."

Injuries played a promiocot role yesterday, with defeoding champions Thomas Muster and Steffi Graf both advancing to the fourth round when their opponents retired.

Lara vows to let his bat do the talking so West Indies can be No. 1 in cricket

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad, (Renter) - Brian Lara has promised to keep his mouth shout and let his batting speak for him.

The West Indies hatsmao, reprimanded last month for two incidents during the World Cup, said: "The way I want to repay the people of the West Indies is by ensuring I score some high totals and that we win the next test series later in the year. We must aim to be oumber one in cricket."

Lara, holder of the world record test score, was reprimanded over derogatory remarks attributed to him after the shock World Cap defeat hy Kenya and his row with team physiotherapist Dennis Waight. He said be would like "in thank all those who supported him during a mixed 1995-1996 season. There were many ups and downs, now I am hoping that only my runs will speak."

Lara also said he wants to remain focused for the Test series in Australia later this year.

"That is a crucial test series for all of us, we have a lot to prove and win back," he said. "To me, it promises to be one of the biggest battles ever. We will probably be the underdogs on this occasion, but that saits us just fine, we are coming to Australia to win and avenge that loss last year."

The West Indies, led by retired captain Richie Richardson, lost their first Test series in 15 years to Mark Taylor's Australians in the Caribbean.

CRITIC'S CHOICE

The Gabrieli Consort and Players perform tonight and tomorrow in Jerusalem.

ISRAEL FESTIVAL

HELEN KAYE

THE choice this evening is a tough one. There's a very political Merchant of Venice set in the SS clubhouse of a concentration camp; it's present-ed by the Weimar Theater of Germany and directed by Hanan Snir at the Sherover Jerusalem Theater at 8:30 (German, Hebrew translation). An all-Bach program is being presented by the UK's Gabrieli Consort of early-music 'singers' and instrumentalists in Henry Crown at 9. Then there's the last performance of Woyzeck on the Highveld hy South Africa's Handspring Puppet Company, and it's no kidsuff; it's at the Rebecca Crown Auditorium at 9 (English). At the same time io the Gerard Behar Center, there are the fun-fantastic dancers of Ghettoriginal.

HELEN KAYE

ElGHTEENTH-ceotury French playwright Pierre de Marivaux is enjoying a revival after a long period of neglect. Dr. Ouriel Zohar's Technion Theater presents Marivaux's The Game of Luck and Chance, a sophisticated love quartet to which each of the lovers thinks he or she has

ADINA HOFFMAN

* THE BIRDCAGE - From its spangled drag-show opening to the wedding at its close. Make Nichols's remake of the popular 1978 French farce La Cage Aux Follesis remarkably close to the original. Scene for scene, gag for gag, The Birdcage barely swerves from the tracks set down by that bittersweet puff piece of a film about a couple of middle-aged homosexuals whose son anoounces his intentions to marry the daughter of a conservative politician. But with the actioo transplanted knowingly from St. Tropez to Miami's South Beach, with the characters turned American and the off-screen realities of the last 20 years being what they are (AIDS, Pat Buchanan, the right-wing push for "family values"), the picture feels different at its core from La Cage - a little more literal perhaps, hut also a good deal more dire. With Robin Williams. Gene Hackman and Nathan Lane. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

IAF hits Hizbullah base

IAF jets struck deep into the Syrian-policed Bekaa Valley in Lebanon, blasting a Hizbullah arms dump near the ancient town of Ba'albek in retaliation for Thursday's ambush, which killed four soldiers and wounded seven. The four, Lt.-Col. Yoram Dahan, Capt. Moshe Harosh, Lt. Yitzhak Mizrahi, and Stf.-Sgt. Yitzhak Shapira, were buried on Friday.

Friday. The attack, which took place before dawn Friday, sent thou-sands of residents fleeing for cover, and reports from Lebanon said explosions rocked the town for an hour after the raid. At least five jets took part in the attack, reportedly firing a dozen air-tosurface rockets.

The IDF Spokesman said the pilots reported "good" hits and all planes returned safely to base. But Lebanese sources said only two of the rockets bit the anmo dump. Reports from Lebanoo said a father and his infant son were lightly injured from flying shrap-nel in the attack, which badly damaged their bome.

Ba'albek is a major Hizbuliah stronghold and supplies front-line guerrillas with weapons and explosives. Hizbullah immediately closed off access to its base and did not acknowledge any casualties.

Later Friday, Hizbuilah mortar fire was directed at Israeli forces operating in the security zone. There were no injuries, but a water tower was damaged, security sources said.

The IAF air raid came a day after Hizbullah set off a double roadside bomb in the Christian-controlled town of Marjayoun, killing the four soldiers. Seven other soldiers were wounded, as well as an SLA officer and two local Lebanese journalists in that attack.

President Ezer Weizman and Chief of Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak visited the wounded on Friday. The condition of Lt.-Col. David Coben continues to be serious, following several opera-tions Thursday night, but the condition of three other soldiers lightly burt in the incident has improved. The army is continuing to inves-tigate the ambush, which began wheo a remote-controlled bomh was detonated, injuring two soldiers. Other soldiers rushed to their aid, at which time a second bomb was detonated.

The soldiers who came to the aid of their wounded comrades had acted spontaneously. "We understand that a soldier who sees his wounded friend will want to tend to him, but apparently this whole issue needs to be reexamined," a Northern Command officer said.

Friday's air raid was the deepest into Lebanon since the April 27 cease-fire agreement coded the 16-day Operation Grapes of Wrath IAF aircraft have attacked Lebanon two times last month -May 12 and May 13-but never as far north as Ba'albek, 10 kilome-ters from the Syrian border. Hizbullab said Thursday's bombing was to avenge the deaths of more than 90 Lebanese civilians killed when IDF artillery mistakenly shelled the UN base in Kana April 18.

Security sources said that the bombing on a main boulevard in Marjayoun, very near the IDF liaison office, was probably car-ried ont with the aid of local residents.

TEL AVIV detectives are investigating the attempted murder of underworld figure Ze'ev Rosenstein, 40, who was shot as he drove down Tel Aviv's Reboy Ibn Gvirol early Friday morning.

NEWS

Police sources said that those who tried to kill Rosenstein were not "particularly profes-sional, judging by their bad aim." Rosenstein was shot by one or more gummen in a passing car. He drove himself to Tel Aviv's Ichilov Hospital, where he was bospitalized in the trauma unit.

Three men suspected of being involved in or planning the sbooting were arrested over the weekend and are expected to appear for a remand hearing this morning. One is the broth-er of Yebezkel Aslan, the underworld kingpin gunned down in February 1993 outside a Tel Aviv restaurant. Rosenstein was held for 30 days in connection with the Aslan killing before being released for lack of evidence. Although others have been arrested for the Aslan murder, police sources have always suspected Rosenstein as being behind the slaying. He was at odds with Aslan over gambling operations, both here and abroad. Rosenstein is another in a long line of underworld figures, involved in gambling operations here and abroad, who have been shot at by rivals. His name has been connected with drug trafficking deals.
